The Tolay Archaeology Project is a Community-Based Participatory Research project that I developed for my dissertation in collaboration with the Federated Indians of Graton Rancheria (FIGR), a tribe of Coast Miwok and Southern Pomo people from Marin and Southern Sonoma County, California. This project seeks to learn more about the cultural and natural resources in Tolay Lake Regional Park in an effort to support the work of FIGR and the Sonoma County Regional Parks Department (SCRPD) as they co-develop and manage these park lands. In this presentation, I will draw on information from archaeological survey, geophysics and excavation in support of oral knowledge and historic accounts to weave a narrative about the history of Tolay. I will show that Coast Miwok people tended, cared for, and maintained a connection to the land as well as to specific archaeological sites and sacred places in the Tolay Valley (albeit in different ways over time) from before Euro-American colonization up to the present day. The current co-management agreement between FIGR and SCRPD is a testament to the long history of engagement with this landscape. With this agreement, there is also the potential to restore and revitalize the Tolay Valley for future generations to come.
