Field School Workshop:
The Whats, Whys, and Hows of Fieldwork Training

hosted by
Vicky M. Oelze & Eréndira M. Quintana Morales, with graduate students
David Ingleman & Renee Boucher

The main purpose of attending a field school in archaeology, biological anthropology, paleoanthropology or primatology is to gain hands-on experience in the basic field methods of these disciplines, such as survey and excavation techniques, observational data and sample collection and data analysis, and usually involves several weeks of institutionally organized field work under the guidance of faculty and other experts.

Are you wondering:

*How to pick the right school and how to apply?
How is field school like and is it really the right thing for me?*

Then please join our conversation, in which we will provide rich resources on how to find and select field schools and volunteering opportunities. We will share our very own field school experiences, describe the conditions we found and what we learned. Finally, there will be plenty of time to address questions from the student audience.

We hope to see many of you in this short and informal workshop!
